Reflections on the Theme

As he was setting out on a journey, a man ran up and knelt before him, and asked him, “Good Teacher, what must I do to inherit eternal life?” Jesus said to him, “Why do you call me good? No one is good but God alone. You know the commandments: ‘You shall not murder; You shall not commit adultery; You shall not steal; You shall not bear false witness; You shall not defraud; Honor your father and mother.’” He said to him, “Teacher, I have kept all these since my youth.” Jesus, looking at him, loved him and said, “You lack one thing; go, sell what you own, and give the money to the poor, and you will have treasure in heaven; then come, follow me.” When he heard this, he was shocked and went away grieving, for he had many possessions.

—Mark 10:17-22 RSV

This year’s theme, “Christian Discipleship: The Journey of a Lifetime,” reflects ABHMS’s goal of supporting faith formation throughout the human life cycle. Our work is guided by two understandings: (1) Christian discipleship is a new identity made possible through relationship with Jesus, and (2) Christian education refers to all the ways that identity-forming relationship is initiated and nurtured.

When Jesus was asked by a wealthy man how to inherit eternal life (a synonym for the kingdom of God in the Gospels), he told the man to sell his possessions, give to the poor, and only then come follow him. While some Christians have taken this directive at face value, many others have used a variety of approaches to minimize it, for example, suggesting that the mandate was exclusive to the man in the story. In the fifth century, Cyril, patriarch of Alexandria, asserted that Jesus’ explanation to his disciples, “It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for someone who is rich to enter the kingdom of God” (Mark 10:25) included a typo and should actually read “rope” (kamilos) instead of “camel” (kamêlos). The ninth century saw the introduction of the historically unattested notion of a mythical “Jerusalem Gate,” which required camels to kneel to pass through. The earliest Christian community in Jerusalem, however, seems to have taken the command quite literally (Acts 2:45).

The true challenge of this text lies in the larger question it begs: If participation in the kingdom of God is a free gift, how then can entrance have such prerequisites? Perhaps rather than being a prerequisite, the mandate reflects the nature of the kingdom. As a realm of equity, a realm without regard for status (Mark 9:35), the kingdom is a context within which a man defined by his wealth could not be comfortable. Being wealthy was part of the man's identity, a part he was unwilling to surrender, and so he went away sad.

Our self-definitions hinder our participation in the kingdom. When we define ourselves as rich, poor, professional, blue collar, retiree, Democrat, Republican, Libertarian, American . . . there isn't space for a new identity that transcends human devices. The call stories in the Gospels, whether to a rich man, fishermen (Matthew 4:19-22), tax collectors (Matthew 9:9; Luke 19:1-10), an adulteress (John 8:10), a busy homemaker (Luke 10:41-42), or a champion of true religion (Acts 9:5-6), have one thing in common—summons to a new identity. To follow Jesus, some left homes, vocations, and families while others gave up social or political status. All took on new identities.

Christian discipleship is about opening ourselves up to a relationship that gives us new life, which means a new identity. As Rachel Held Evans stated it in Faith Unraveled, "Being a Christian isn't about agreeing to a certain way; it is about embodying a certain way." Christian education, therefore, is about nurturing identity-changing relationship with Jesus by practicing the presence of Jesus. The earliest Christian communities practiced the presence of Jesus in five primary ways: celebration, love, service, traveling light, and trusting the Spirit.

Celebration. Early Christian worship had one focus—celebration of what God had done in Jesus. Early Christians believed that Jesus was made present in their midst when they retold the stories and sayings of Jesus through hymns, prayers, proclamations, and rituals.

Love. The early communities were known by the unique quality of their internal relationships, loving one another as Jesus had loved them (John 13:34-35; 1 Corinthians 13:4-7).

Service. Jesus demonstrated God's love for the world (John 3:16), so the love shared within communities was not reserved for believers. It necessarily flowed outward in acts of service to those in need—among whom Jesus was found present (Matthew 25:31-46).

Traveling light. Early in the fourth century the Christian church became focused on power and property, leaving later generations encumbered by status, buildings, programs, and complex dogma. We, like the rich man, need to be freed from the things that possess us so we can be defined by the kingdom.

Trusting the Spirit. The Spirit, the very presence of Jesus, sustained the early communities and empowered their mission. We need to trust that same Spirit to enliven our celebrations, "enloven" our relationships, and empower our mission.

Effective initiation and formation of Christian discipleship depends largely on the Christian community's capacity to experience Jesus' presence in its internal life and to be the presence of Jesus in the world. That is our raison d'être. Without it, the church need not exist.

Most congregations want to go back in time to what they perceive to be their church's glory days. What they need to do is go back to the days when "the glory of the Lord" was touching countless lives, back to the time when the first followers were discipled in response to the call of Jesus.

We live in a world today that resembles much of the context of the earliest Christian faith communities. Both contexts are characterized by spiritual pluralism, huge unreached/un-churched people groups, Christianity as a minority faith, the West as a mission field, international (im)migration, economic globalization, extensive poverty, urbanization, oral learners, multiculturalism, and a majority of the population under age thirty. The problems they faced were the same as the problems we face: a rising divorce rate, a falling birth rate, a slow-moving and at times unjust justice system, politicians who pilfered the public treasury, deforestation to satisfy the demand for timber; and the "cementification" of green space (a phrase coined by Alberto Angela). Additionally, there were military and geopolitical issues in the same places we see them today—Iran (Persia), Iraq (Babylonia), and Israel (Palestine).

It is clear overall that what we have been doing to make fully committed followers of Christ just isn't working. Our efforts have not been successful in creating authentic Christian disciples—followers of Jesus who have the capacity to turn this world upside down, as was said of those first-century disciples of Christ (Acts 17:6). It is no longer possible to effectively present the gospel or to nurture believers using the same basic methods of modernity that have been employed throughout the second half of the last century. The days of program-driven discipleship / spiritual formation are over—or ought to be. It is clear we need to make a shift in both the mentality of disciple making (why we do it) and in the modality of disciple making (how we do it).

It is clear we need to make a shift in both the mentality of disciple making (why we do it) and in the modality of disciple making (how we do it).

What we need in discipleship is a shift—a "disciple-SHIFT"—back to the way things were done not in the twentieth century but twenty centuries ago. We must shift from the linear to the dynamic model, from the academic to the experiential, from the institution-focused to the individual-focused, from the scripted to the spontaneous. We need to move from monologue to dialogue, from talking to listening, from engaged heads to engaged hands, from program to personal, from content to contextual, and especially from just learning the Book to truly living the Book.

The following four basic elements of first-century disciple making / faith formation can serve us well in the twenty-first century.

■ The relational. When people spent both quality and quantitative time together, they not only got to know one another better, but together they got to know the Lord better. Acts shows Paul spending a year and a half in the city of Corinth and then later two years in the city of Ephesus. Paul's ministry was not a weeklong, onetime crusade designed to bring people to faith. Rather, it was about coming into relationship with people and growing together in relationship with Christ. It was about getting to know people and people getting to know Jesus better, recognizing that there is much to be learned over the long haul—a process that cannot be rushed or pushed. Extended time together allows for finding common ground and maturing faith, as well as developing connectedness with one another and together connecting to something larger than ourselves.

■ The conversational. As in modern times, in the days of the early church a worldview of no absolute truth prevailed. People didn't accept things at face value. They took time to discuss and then decide. We see this phenomenon in Acts 17 when Paul spoke in Athens, and after hearing him out, the people responded by saying they needed to think through what he had to say by talking about it. A few said yes, most said no, but many said they were interested but not immediately invested. Twentieth-century discipleship, especially in the latter half of the last century, focused on an academic model of information download, the expectation being that by Christians simply imparting and implanting truth, recipients would grow. Now we know that those on the receiving end need to interact with those sharing God's truth. There needs to be a give-and-take, a back-and-forth, so that individuals can work out the dynamics of their salvation in real-life situations.

■ The biographical. In keeping with the first century's emphasis on the narrative, with the understanding that everyone had a story to live and therefore a story to tell, Paul frequently, and eventually almost exclusively, told the story of his own life. The tale of his encounter with Christ and the narrative of his new life since that encounter became the foundation of his message (Acts 22–26). Discipleship formation takes place through a learn-by-living model—Christ living in us, yes, but equally as important, us living for Christ by living out our lives for the sake of others.

■ The incarnational. “Faith without deeds is dead,” James would write of first-century discipleship (James 2:26). People may not remember what we say, but they definitely will not forget what we do. The adage “Actions speak louder than words” is indeed true. Acts 9:36–39 does not mention anything that Dorcas said but records what she did for the marginalized and disenfranchised in the first century. Acts 19 shows Paul using his God-given tent-making skills to connect with other believers and nonbelievers in the marketplace—not in the church. Paul and Dorcas each used their talents and abilities to mature their own faith as well as to nurture the authentic faith of others. This is hands-on, life-relevant, and experiential discipleship formation.

An intentional shift is needed today to a multifaceted, contextual, inclusive model of discipleship that has greater potential to result in converted seekers, connected believers, and committed disciples. We need to change our ways so that others can change theirs. If the early church could make disciples in the first century with fewer resources and greater marginalization than we have today, we can do it today—through our shared Advocate, the ultimate disciple maker, the Holy Spirit.

The Power of Practicing Presence

Young Children and Faith Formation

Thousands of books, blogs, Facebook pages, and other internet resources on child development clamor for a parent's attention. These resources provide advice on the whole realm of parenting—from breast-feeding, sleep training, and making organic baby food to choosing the best toys and books to cultivate a baby's intelligence.

But when it comes to a child's spiritual growth, parents often feel ill-equipped. Most parents or other primary caregivers yearn for their children to experience home as spiritually formative, but they may be uncertain about exactly what that means. The idea that they might be their children's first spiritual teachers can be daunting for adults who have doubts about their own understanding of faith. They may equate the role of spiritual teacher with the kinds of intentional, systematic learning they experienced in Sunday school.

As important as the context of formal Christian education is, Marjorie J. Thompson urges us to embrace a foundational vision for faith formation that is profound yet at the same time simple. In her book Family: The Forming Center (Nashville: Upper Room Books, 1996), Thompson characterizes the family as “a sacred shelter for the sake of the world God loves.” She further suggests that we can reflect God's love in our families by focusing on basic spiritual practices grounded in relationship—practices that are built into the very fabric and structure of family life.

How do parents begin to expand the ways in which they nurture their young children's faith formation through relationships? Thompson suggests that one way is through presence. An adult can nurture a baby's growing sense of connectedness simply by making time to be fully present.

Attending fully has always been challenging for adults exhausted by the responsibility of caring for a tiny human, coupled with the need to meet the normal demands of daily living. These days, however, being present to one's child is complicated by the reality that digital media is as ubiquitous as the air we breathe. Media at one's fingertips 24/7 presents serious competition to the demands of 24/7 parenting. Adults whose attention is focused on a tiny glowing screen need to understand the power of attending just as fully to their young children.

How does one practice presence? In the midst of attending to the small tasks of child care, a parent can look for moments when deep connections are possible. A mother can notice the intensity of a nursing baby's loving gaze as he locks eyes with her in the wee hours of the morning. A father can slow down and pay attention when his infant daughter reaches for his finger while he is diapering her. Later a parent might make himself fully present to his toddler as she stops on a walk to examine a leaf, experiencing wonder at its intricacy and beauty. An adult can listen closely to a child's comments, taking cues from what he says and noticing how he focuses completely and with wonder on the created world.

Will a parent be fully present every time these possibilities present themselves? Of course not! Young parents need the good news that being fully present to their children is not feasible, let alone possible, all the time. But spiritual formation is a partnership in which the Holy Spirit is at work in and through parents, as well as in and through their children. The more times a parent does attend, the more often the Spirit may work to enhance presence in the lives of parent and child. The more a parent is able to experience presence as a holy moment, the less he or she may be tempted to stray to a smart-phone screen.

For adults who feel less than conversant with the Bible or whose prayer life may be limited or even nonexistent, parenting a young child offers the opportunity to enrich the life of the entire family as they engage in simple, intentional spiritual practices—encountering God in the Bible and connecting with God through prayer. These intentional practices also offer opportunities for enhancing the Spirit’s powerful shaping by practicing presence.

Here are just a few suggestions that may spark other ideas:

■ Reading stories from a good Bible storybook, such as Growing in God’s Love: A Story Bible by Elizabeth F. Caldwell and Carol B. Wehrheim (Westminster John Knox Press, 2018), allows those who are less familiar with the Bible to encounter God alongside their young child as they experience the stories together. Adults can listen to the child’s questions and comments with the understanding that an honest “I don’t know—let’s find out” or “What do you think?” is always okay. This practice can encourage adults to find the foundational stories in the Bible and enhance their knowledge of the Scriptures.

■ Adults and children alike can practice their prayer life, learning naturally through simple table graces. If the practice of saying grace is begun when the child is still an infant, it will grow to be a part of a family’s life together as the child grows. They may choose to use a blessing they remember from childhood or locate one from a book such as J. Bradley Wigger’s Together We Pray: A Prayer Book for Families (Chalice, 2005).

■ Another simple prayer practice that primary caregivers can initiate when a child is still very young is called examen. After lighting a candle on the table, each adult mentions moments from the day that were life giving and those that were life draining. As children learn to talk, these moments can be referred to as “glads” and “sads.”

The formation that takes place in and through the life of the family truly is the foundation for a child’s spiritual growth. Parents can take heart in the good news that while no one can be fully present all the time to a young child, there is One whose presence is abiding in and through the mundane events of our lives, both good and bad. All who care about families, and about children, can give thanks for that presence, seeking to be ever more attuned to the Spirit’s work.

Martha Bettis Gee, a certified Christian educator, is recently retired as Associate for Child Advocacy and Networking for the Presbyterian Church (USA). She continues to work as a writer, editor, and educational consultant.

Judson Bible Journeys for Adults

The adult curriculum for American Baptists

SESSION 1 • SEPTEMBER 1, 2019

Faith and Doubt

SCRIPTURE: Genesis 19:1, 15-26, 29

KEYVERSE: So it was that, when God destroyed the cities of the Plain, God remembered Abraham, and sent Lot out of the midst of the overthrow, when he overthrew the cities in which Lot had settled. —Genesis 19:29

SESSION OBJECTIVES:

- to appreciate the fortitude it takes to make a new beginning;
- to consider how our faith may make a difference in the future; and
- to recognize and admit to doubts, and how doubt can exist on a continuum with faith.

Introducing the Scripture

The destruction of the cities of the plain comes in a larger narrative about how God is calling a people into relationship with the Eternal. The first book of the Bible, whose name, Genesis, means "to begin," scholars tell us is not chronologically the oldest of our Scriptures, yet it serves as a grand introduction to God and God's people and the covenantal relationship between them. Without taking a longer view of the Scripture, it is easy to get sidetracked into questions of the nature of the sin and the fearful destruction that happened in Sodom and Gomorrah, and not to see the Scripture's main points: which is that God seeks a loving, committed relationship with humankind. Though we frequently fall short of God's standard of righteousness, we are offered forgiveness and a new beginning.

In Genesis 19 specifically, Lot is called to a new beginning. Indeed, it is a mark of the great work of God to re-create and to begin anew. Such moments lend themselves to theological reflection. God's relationship with Abraham, taken together with Lot's efforts to live faithfully wherever he found himself, worked to call Lot to a new life.

Genesis serves as a grand introduction to God and God's people and the covenantal relationship between them.

The juxtaposition of the previous blocks of Scripture helps to illuminate the larger meaning of this text. In Genesis 13 we read that Abram and Lot divide companies; Abram settled in the land of Canaan, "while Lot settled among the cities of the Plain and moved his tent as far as Sodom" (13:12). The "cities of the Plain" were five cities that lay on the Jordan River plain in the southern part of Canaan: Admah, Zeboiim, Zoar, Sodom, and Gomorrah. Genesis 18:22-33 gives an account of Abraham's negotiation with God about how many righteous people there would need to be for God to spare Sodom, which was susceptible to destruction due to its "very grave" sin (18:20). Abraham's questions, searching into the extent of God's mercy, stand in contrast to the vision of retributive justice that unfolds for the people of Sodom. Note these theological questions that the Scripture implies: What kind of a God is this? How are mercy and judgment balanced? What are the roles of faith and doubt in our decisions?

The story of Sodom and Gomorrah, two disordered communities, was an important turning point in the story of God and God's people. The particular sins that were happening in Sodom and Gomorrah are not recorded in this session's Scripture. Genesis 13:13 says that "the people of Sodom were wicked, great sinners against the Lord." This, Genesis 19 gives us a statement of the city's sinfulness, not a full account of it. In Jeremiah 23:14 a variety of sinful acts are named, and Ezekiel 16:49 identifies the sins as pride, excess of food (gluttony), and indifference to the poor and needy.

According to the Scripture, Lot is set apart in Sodom by the hospitality he offers to strangers and by the faith of his uncle, Abraham.

offers ten practical guidelines for women called to ministry. From the pragmatic to the devotional, these rules provide female pastors and women called to other ministries with practical wisdom for succeeding with grace, integrity, and style in a male-dominated vocation. Compact, conversational, and compelling, this little volume is indispensable for any woman who wants to serve God faithfully—and with flair!

School of Prophets: A Bicentennial History of Colgate Rochester Crozer Divinity School

John R. Tyson

In commemoration of the 200th anniversary of Colgate Rochester Crozer Divinity School's beginnings—with thirteen men and thirteen dollars—this significant work unfolds the organizational history of a great theological seminary, as well as the dramatic story of the notable women and men who contributed to the school's rich legacy. While this is a bicentennial history of an institution, it is fundamentally the history of the people who have epitomized, shaped, and advanced its expanding heritage. The narrative includes chapters about institutional growth and development, as well as chapters that serve as cameo biographies of key people who exemplified the spirit of that same period:

- William Newton Clark
- Walter Rauschenbusch
- Howard Thurman
- Joanna P. Moore
- Martin Luther King Jr.

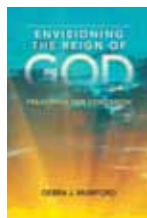

In the final analysis, founding president Augustus Strong was correct to call this a story of “bricks, brains, and books,” but in the larger sense it is an account of the galvanizing prophetic Christian vision evolved from its American Baptist roots to the ecumenical enterprise known as Colgate Rochester Crozer Divinity School. ISBN 978-0-8170-1804-7 $29.99

River of Life, Feast of Grace: Baptism, Communion, and Discipleship

An online leader's guide is available for small-group study. ISBN 978-0-8170-1805-4 $17.99

Envisioning the Reign of God: Preaching for Tomorrow

Debra J. Mumford

What we believe about the kingdom of God deeply affects how we relate to the world we inhabit here and now. Professor and scholar Debra Mumford takes the Christian study of “last things” (eschatology) and makes it practical for pastors and church leaders today. “Eschatology is not just about how humanity will be judged on the last day,” she argues, “but how we live our lives every day. . . . Eschatology is not simply about our ultimate destruction but rather how we construct and conduct our human existence daily. Eschatology is an existential endeavor that every pastor and preacher who wrestles with the will of God for all of creation must take up with earnest intentionality.” Each chapter considers the eschatological beliefs of a different preacher and how those beliefs shape the style and content of that leader's ministry. ISBN 978-0-8170-1806-1 $21.99

Devotions from HERstory: 31 Days with Women of Faith

Lynn Domina

Women have often remained hidden in history, including religious history. Yet even nameless women can be honored, and their faith and actions can inspire us even when we don't know exactly who they were. And when we do know the names and biographic details of women who have lived more recently, we can commit ourselves to keeping their memories alive. This book attempts to honor many women who have come before us by connecting their stories across time as a resource for our own devotional lives.

Originally intended for the 31 days of Women's History Month in March, these illustrated, undated entries permit readers to begin these devotions at any time of the year.

Leadership Growth & Development

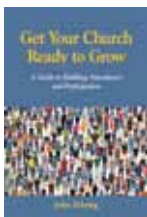

Side by Side: Being Christian in a Multifaith World

Richard P. Olson

In just a few decades, the United States has changed from a largely Christian nation to the most religiously diverse country in the world.

Side by Side reflects on living faithfully as a Christian in this new interreligious world. Reading the Gospels, the author finds fresh insight and guidance to live out our faith with respect, love, and regard for those who follow a different religious path. Through a personal journey of encounters, experiences, and readings, the author invites readers to join him in a venture of discovery to reflect, explore, and meditate. He focuses on relations among Christians, Jews, and Muslims, and with the “spiritual but not religious,” as well as on how to navigate conflicts between Christian traditions. $16.99

Emphasizing participation and engagement over membership numbers, Zehring urges church leaders to focus on meeting people’s needs—in the congregation and, even more, in the surrounding community. $14.99

Be My Witness: The Great Commission for Preachers

Marvin A. McMickle

Be My Witness explores the Great Commission as recorded in Acts 1:8, “Be my witnesses in Jerusalem, and in all Judea and Samaria, and to the ends of the earth.” McMickle offers a unique approach to the preaching task and suggests a way for preachers today to declare the gospel with relevance to the many issues and challenges society faces. He also examines the implications of what it means to be a witness for Jesus and considers a threefold understanding of the word witness—seeing something, saying something, and suffering something—and develops a twenty-first-century theology of preaching that encompasses both content and context for delivering the gospel message. $17.99

(Mark 10:17-22, Matthew 4:19-22; John 8:10; Luke 10:41-42; Acts 9:5-6)

Leader: Jesus called, “Come follow me.”

Congregation: “But first leave your possessions behind.”

Leader: And becoming as children, we will enter the kingdom of God and learn who we truly are.

All: Free me to grow, to become that self, the seed of which you planted in me at my making; free me to become a child of the King.
